

CHRIST PICTURED AS LABOR LEADER OF HIS OWN TIME

Bouck White Likens Him to Debs, Gompers and Mitchell.

Bouck White, author and secretary of the Trinity Club, Montague and Clinton streets, Brooklyn, is awaiting with eagerness akin to fear the judgment of Bishop Frederick Burgess of the Long Island Diocese of the Episcopal Church on his latest book, "The Call of the Carpenter."

It may prove to be an accusation of heresy which Mr. White anticipates, also may involve his friend, the Rev. John Howard Melish, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, who has sanctioned the book.

Mr. White has pictured Christ in the light of the great labor leader of his time, and has likened him to Eugene V. Debs, John Mitchell and Samuel Gompers. He declares the crucifixion has its parallel in modern times in the alleged abduction and quick transportation of the McNamara from Indianapolis to Los Angeles.

Bishop Burgess said to-day he had received the book and would read it when he had time. He said he had heard something of its contents, but did not care to pass judgment on it until he had read it for himself.

In his description of Christ, Mr. White argues that he was the one man of the times who was able to diagnose the situation and that he foresaw more clearly than any one else just what was going to happen in the future.

ARISTOCRACY BAD THEN AND NOW.

He presents the aristocracy of those times in a questionable light, leaving the inference that it has not changed much in modern times. He says the Roman Empire was the welding together into a gigantic federation of the wealth and society of the times, for the oppression of the poor and the taxation of those of the middle classes who would stand for it.

Christ, he says, was not the humble, lamblike man he is so often pictured, but a big personality and a fighter of great sagacity and power. Physically he was not a robust man, Mr. White argues, drawing this conclusion from the fact that he was on the cross only six hours, a punishment which scarcely would have been sufficient to kill a robust man.

He declares Christ was not crucified by the Hebrews alone. He contends that the Hebrews as a race loved Christ and adored him as a leader. It was only the aristocrats, whose oppression of the poor had brought them into the limelight of the day, that sought his life.

Calaphas and Annas, the high priests, represented capital, he says. Herod, the king of the Jews, was only half Hebrew, while Pilate, the official representative of the Roman Empire and the man who could have saved Christ, was a Roman citizen. Mathematically he declares Christ's crucifixion was five-eighths Hebrew and three-eighths Romans or Gentiles.

MOTHER OF CHRIST STRONG-EST-MINDED WOMAN.

Mary, the mother of Christ, Mr. White pictures as the strongest-minded woman in the history of the world. The immaculate conception, he describes as nothing more than a determination on the part of Mary, when she saw the drift of the times and the growing power of the aristocrats, to dedicate her expected son to the cause of the lower classes. With this in mind she instilled into him from the day of his birth the principles of the brotherhood of man, love of neighbor.

three years, he declares, is the best proof of the great personality of the man. In that short time his doctrines travelled all over the world of that day. Christ knew, he said, that he was a marked man, just as many of our great leaders of to-day know it. The taking of Christ and his crucifixion a few hours later, he declares, was the greatest piece of "rail-roading" ever committed in a court of justice.

Among other things, Mr. White is the author of "The Book of Daniel Drew," which assumes to be an amplified diary of Drew's dealings with his ancient financial enemy, Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt. After the publication of the book White was summoned before District Attorney Whitman on complaint of Drew's descendants to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for criminal libel. The case was never pushed.

INVITATION to attend the OPENING
